

Living in Conflict

Written by Miss Anunyaporn Thepbucha

From Rachineeburana School in Nakhon Pathom, Thailand

We all have problems with conflict. Mosca once said that conflicts in society, whether between individuals and individuals or between groups and groups, are natural and cannot be avoided. Conflict is indispensable in creating progress and order in society; it is just an obstacle in our lives. In addition, just being able to overcome this conflict makes our lives grow even more.

In my opinion, conflict can be divided into two types: 1. Conflict within a person 2. Conflict within a group of people. Conflict within a person that is often encountered is wanting good grades but refusing to submit work to make us get what we want, but there will be both likings and dislikes. Conflicts that arise between individuals within a group when working together have opinions. Responsibility and different abilities This causes conflict within the group and causes disunity.

Of course, conflict is something we cannot avoid. We just have to accept it and face it. Conflict within us occurs when we don't get what we hope for or want. No one is fulfilled or always gets what they want. We can always accept disappointment and learn from it. Conflict in groups may arise. From opinions and misunderstandings, when this problem arises, we need to talk and communicate to understand each other better.

Moreover, conflict is just an obstacle in our lives. If we can overcome this obstacle, it will make us understand the problem more, and we must dare to learn new things from conflict. We can learn from past experiences. As a guideline for continuing in life, we can use our past experiences to help those around us by talking, understanding, and helping each other.

In summary, conflict is something that no one wants to happen, but it cannot be avoided. You just have to accept it and face it. But what we have encountered, whether good or bad, is that these things cause more experiences in life, and it is a lesson for us. As we grow up, we have to face more and more conflicts. Everything that we encounter is an experience in living life. I believe that as we move forward, overcoming this obstacle and conflict allows us to grow to another level of living.