Teacher, Teacher

As a child, I used to playing 'Teacher, Teacher' with my cousin Maryam at home. However, our imaginative game often turned into a battleground, with both of us insisting on being the teacher. We were stuck in a dilemma, each wanting to take the lead. But instead of letting the conflict, we decided to find a solution. We agreed to alternate roles every three days - I would be the teacher for three days, and then Maryam would take the charge for the next three.

Through this experience, I learned a valuable lesson: the importance of listening and respecting everyone's perspectives. By embracing each other's viewpoints, we not only resolved our conflict but also discovered the joy of collaboration and mutual understanding.
